Security and Other Features

Besides the basic elements of a draft instrument, there can be other legal elements to a draft.

- Does the check say Non-Negotiable? This means it's not actually a draft instrument.
- Does the check indicate that two signatures are required when presented for payment? If so, make sure that there are two different signatures.
- Does the check indicate that the instrument is only good between a minimum or maximum amount? If so, make sure that the amount is within the guidelines.
- Does it indicate that security features such as a watermark or specific background color are used? If so, make sure check does indeed have these features.
- Is the font for the owner's name visibly different from the font in the address? Does it look like one was written on a typewriter and another on a computer?
